Jill Kolongowski is a nonfiction writer and professor living in Northern California. Her first book is a collection of essays called Life Lessons Harry Potter Taught Me, and was released recently in the fall of 2017. She received her MFA from Saint Mary’s College of California, and is also the managing editor at YesYes Books.

Jill has received fellowships to attend the Artist Artsmith Residency, Lit Camp, and the Squaw Valley Community of Writers. Her essays have won Sundog Lit’s First Annual Contest series and the Diana Woods Memorial Prize in Creative Nonfiction at Lunch Ticket magazine. She is a Hufflepuff who grew up in Michigan.

Thursday, November 9 • 7:00–8:00pm
MSU Main Library, Green Room (4West)

An approachable and inspiring series of short essays that examines the greatest YA series ever with a combination of adult literary criticism and childhood curiosity.

From light to dark, Albus to Voldemort, the essays in this book discuss girl power, the importance of words, fate vs. free will, the lines between good and evil, and, above all, the magic and power of love.